3801 [Little Fatima.]

[Painted by Frederick, Lord Leighton.] Gerald Robinson. London Published December 15th 1898 by Arthur Lucas the Proprietor, 31 New Bond Street, W. Mezzotint, proof signed by the engraver, ltd to 275. 310 x 490mm. £420

'Little Fatima' has an added interest because of its Orientalism. Leighton first showed an Oriental subject, a 'Reminiscence of Algiers' at the Society of British Artists in 1858. Ten years later, in 1868, he made a journey to Egypt and in the autumn of 1873 he worked in Damascus where he made many studies and where he probably gained the inspiration for the present work. Gerald Philip Robinson (printmaker; 1858 - 1942)Mostly declared pirints PSA.

Dorothy Tennant [1855-1926] who becomes Lady Stanley has a double title to fame. Apart from her success in the world of art, she married Mr. H. M. Stanley, the explorer, in 1890, nine years before he was knighted. To this may be added the fact that she figures in a picture by Millais, entitled 'No,' while her portrait, holding a squirrel, was also painted by Waits. Her artistic life began very early, for she was drawing before she could read or write. Even in those days she showed a preference for the street arab types which are represented in this picture. Her training was of the best. She studied under Sir E. Poynter and M. Legros at the Slade School before becoming the pupil of Henner in Paris, where she spent three winters.

John Everett Millais. Thos Oldham Barlow [Pencil signatures.] Published January 10th, 1882, by Thomas Agnew & Sons, London, Liverpool & Manchester, and Knoedler New York. Copyright Registered.

Mezzotint on india, Printsellers' blindstamp. Limited to 200. 580 x 780mm. Tear just entering india. £550

Sir Walter Scott's novel 'The Bride of Lammermoor', basis of Donizetti's 'Lucia di Lammermoor'. Edgar, Master of Ravenswood, has just rescued Lucy Ashton, daughter of his enemy, from a wild bull. Unaware of his identity she is surprised at his cold manner. The model for Ravenswood perfectly fits Scott's description: 'A monteso cap and a black feather drooped over the wearer's brow, and partly concealed his features which, so far as seen were dark, regular, and full of majestic though somewhat sullen expression'. Millais, Holman Hunt and Rossetti had formed the revolutionary Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood in 1848.

7544 T. Sandby Junr. St. Georges Row Oxford Street, Terms of teaching Drawing. One Scholar, Eight Lessons, two Guineas Two Do. Three Do. Four Do. [column to left] Three Do. Four Do. Six Do. [column to right].

B. West R.A. inv. 1791 F. Bartolozzi RA etched. Publish'd May 1791. by T. Sandby Junr. St. Georges Row.

Etching, 243 x 165mm. Tipped into an album page. £380

Elaborate advertisement for the services of Thomas Sandby (1721 - 1798, brother of Paul) as drawing master. Vignette of a classical artist drawing a silhouette set in decorative oval frame above the pedestal on which the lettering inscribed. Very rare, with William Bell-Scott's collector's mark on verso.

7579 Erra Pater Prophecy or Frost Faire 1683. [Stalls and activities on the frozen Thames background captioned in the plate. Below image scratched-letter homily to "Old Erra Pater" in two columns.]

[n.d., c.1760.]

Etching, sheet 249 x 178mm. Good impression, tipped into album page. £320

'Erra Pater' was the pseudonym of William Lilly. Lilly (1602 - 1681) was a famed astrologer, occultist and almanack maker during his time. He was particularly adept at interpreting the astrological charts drawn up for horary questions, as this was his speciality. Lilly caused much controversy in 1666 for allegedly predicting the Great Fire of London some 14 years before it happened. For this reason many people believed that he may have had started the fire, but there is no evidence to support these claims. He was tried for the offence in Parliament, but was found to be innocent.

This print commemorates one of most celebrated frost fairs occurred in the winter of 1683-1684, which was thus described by John Evelyn:

'Coaches plied from Westminster to the Temple, and from several other stairs too and fro, as in the streets, sleds, sliding with ice skates, bull-baiting, horse and coach races, puppet plays and interludes, cooks, tipping and other lewd places, so that it seemed to be a bacchanalian triumph, or carnival on the water.' Naive etching by an amateur hand after an engraving of the same title published by James Norris.
Guildhall: p799178.

10852 Ex Libris Ernst Klinger.

Luigi Kasimir [signed in pencil lower right.] [n.d., c.1940.]

Ex libris bookplate, coloured etching, 125 x 125mm. 5 x 5". £550

A charming bookplate, the house of Ernst Klinger (1900 - 1952) framed and reflected in a mirror, a spider on its web crawling across the foreground of the composition.

Klinger was a leading member of the 20th Century Munich School. Following his studies at the Münchner Akademie during 1919-1924, Klinger became an adherent of 'Die Neue Sachlichkeit' (New Objectivity). This Expressionist movement, founded in Germany in the aftermath of World War I by George Grosz and Otto Dix, combined a realistic style with a cynical and socially critical philosophical stance.

Many of Klinger's New Objectivity works, painted in Paris and Mallorca during 1925-1927, were destroyed during the Second World War. During 1927-1931 Klinger travelled regularly to Positano and Mallorca where he left a few works to survive the destruction of the War. In 1929, Klinger joined the Juryfreien, an organisation banned by the Nationalsozialisten in 1934. In 1939 he moved to New York and gradually progressed to Abstraction. His abstract works from the 1940s and 1950s are lyrical in style and burst with colour.

By Luigi Kasimir (1881 - 1962), world renowned Austrian-born etcher and painter, born in 1881 in Pettau, a part of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. Kasimir attended the Vienna Academy of Art where he studied under William Unger, who introduced him to the technique of the colored etching. Kasimir was among the first to develop the technique of the colored etching. Prior to this, prints were usually handcoloured with the colour being applied in a casual, haphazard manner. Kasimir first did a sketch- usually in pastel. He then transferred the design on as many as four to six plates, printing one after the other and applying the colour on the plate, all done by hand. The finished etching is a true original.

10857 Amen. [Devotional card.]

Eimmart del. Geo: Child Sculp. Printed for John Bowles, at No.13 in Cornhill. [n.,d., c.1760.]

10872 The Bubblers Mirrou: or Englands Folly.

Printed for Carington Bowles next ye Chapter House in St. Pauls Ch. Yard, London. [n.d., c.1762.]

Engraved broadside with central mezzotint and etched vignettes, 340 x 255mm. 13¼ x 10". Tatty extremities; light foxing. £530

Satire on the South Sea Bubble; a man weeps holding up his cloak and handkerchief; above is an emblematic scene and below a coat of arms. On all sides engraved text giving a 'List of Bubbles'.

The South Sea Company was a British joint stock company that traded in South America during the 18th century. Founded in 1711, the company was granted a monopoly to trade in Spain's South American colonies as part of a treaty during the War of Spanish Succession. In return, the company assumed the national debt England had incurred during the war. Speculation in the company's stock led to a great economic bubble known as the South Sea Bubble in 1720, which caused financial ruin for many. This plate was first issued by Thomas Bowles in 1720; this impression from a re-worked and re-issued state, on laid paper, by his successor Henry Carington Bowles (1724 - 1793).

BM Satires: 1621. State ii of iii.

Sold & Published June 1, 1799 by Edwd. Orme, Printseller to the King corner of George Street, & Conduit Street London.

Coloured mezzotint. 550 x 330mm. Framed. Some time staining as to be expected, small crack in the figure of Banquo in the centre. Not visible unless held to the light. £680

Edward Orme [1774 - 1821] publisher/printer; printmaker; Transparent prints produced an illusion, making a painted scene appear extremely realistic, at least at first glance. Being changes often to create a fresh entertainment. As an artist and publisher, Orme had promoted the fashion for transparencies. These coloured prints were chemically treated thereby rendering parts transparent when held to the light and giving an effective illusion of moonlight, fire etc. Due to their popularity few have survived. This example presented for use in an early frame has is a powerful shakespearian scene where the Macbeth returns to the Witches, Banquo's ghost appears through the darkness.

A still-life with skull, emphasising the brevity of life.

The British Museum 'Curator's Comments' notes, 'there is another version of this composition in reverse by Pieter Schenk (Hollstein 472). Whether it is the original or copy is disputed; but there are strong arguments for giving Robinson the priority'.

Robert Robinson (1674 - 1706). Decorative painter and mezzotinter. His father was probably the John who appears in the records of the Painter-Stainers' Company between 1667-71. Robert was admitted as a member of the Company by redemption in 1674, and this is the first known date of his life. Henceforth, his career may be followed through their records until 1691. He took on no fewer than ten apprentices, and on several occasions took part in searches on the Company's behalf to inspect the quality of work and uncover unauthorised practitioners. He lived in the parish of St Bride's in Fleet Street, and was buried there in December 1706.

Sir Edwin Landseer was fundamental to the Victorian vision and fascination with Scottish history and landscape of the Highlands. His early diptych "High Life / Low Life" (painted in 1829) typifies the contrast between Scotland and England as "one of character. The deerhound in "High Life" reflects the chivalric and aristocratic world of the past. In "Low Life" the battle scarred terrier, representing the tough, plebeian, urban values of "John Bull." (Ormond, Richard. Sir Edwin Landseer, p. 99,Thames and Hudson, 1981). Landseer's images are more complex than some of their subjects might suggest. In 'High Life', the dog itself was once thought to have been Scott's dog Maida, but in pose and colouring the dog is closer to Landseer's own deerhound.

Samuel William Reynolds [1774 - 1835] Produced his first mezzotints in 1794 as a pupil of C. H. Hodges and also John Raphael Smith where he more than likely met George Morland and had the opportunity to engrave the 'Kennel' in 1796. Being among the earliest works by this engraver it is regarded as one of his finest plates.

4110 Charter of Liberties. Cardinal Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, producing to the Barons and the rest of the Assembly at S.t Edmund's Bury, the Charter granted by Henry the 1st, in which that Monarch pledged himself to abolish the arbitrary Laws of the Normans then in force...

Engraved from the Original Picture in the Gallery of the University of Oxford.

Painted by W.Martin. Engraved by W.Ward. London. Pub.d Dec.r 16, 1795 by W.Martin, Hamilton Street, Piccadilly.

Mezzotint. 580 x 650mm. Repaired tears, crack in platemark at bottom. £980

The Charter of Liberties, was issued by Henry I upon his ascension to the throne in 1100. It is considered a landmark document in English history and a forerunner of Magna Carta, addressing abuses of royal power, such as over-taxation of the barons, the abuse of vacant sees, and the practices of simony and pluralism.

However it was generally ignored by monarchs until in 1213 Archbishop Langton reminded the nobles that their liberties had been guaranteed a century before. The Magna Carta was signed two years later.

Painted by Jams Northcote, R.A. Engraved by James Gillray. Publish'd June24th 1790, by R.t Wilkinson, No.58, Cornhill.

Stipple engraving, proof before title. Sheet 485 x 640mm. Trimmed to plate. Tear entering printed area at top. £550

This image represents the high point of pro-revolutionary feeling in Britain towards France, after the storming of the Bastille in 1789 and before 'The Terror' and repressions of the 1790s. Cells and cages are broken open and emaciated prisoners freed by soldiers. Skeletons, fetters, racks and other instruments of torture represent the horrors of the institution that is being overthrown. A good impression of this print engraved by James Gillray, one of his infrequent departures from caricature, in a bold and striking manner. 'History, No.3.' inscribed top left.

10864 King James ye Second's Lord Chancellor endeavouring ttto save himself by flight. Lord Chancellor Jefferies (commonly called ye Bloody Judge Jefferies) seized in a Sailors dress at Wapping by the People at ye time of ye Glorious Revolution; 1688.

[n.d., c.1690.]

Etching, 325 x 225mm. 12¾ x 8¾". A fine impression. £550

George Jeffreys, 1st Baron Jeffreys (1645 - 1689), Judge and Lord Chancellor, disguised as a sailor saying, "Tear me to pieces" is arrested by constables, an angry crowd behind with various speech balloons: "Remember ye West", "Remember Mr. Cornish", "Remember ye Bishops", "Remember Maudlin College", "Knock his brains out". At the top of the sheet at left bust and shoulders of a Quaker saying "Brother Peters what doest thow say" and opposite Father Edward Petre (1631 - 1699) in a Jesuit's cap, says, "Thou wilt be hang'd by yee & nay". At the foot of the sheet, a devil emeges from a flaming hell-mouth to attack a Jesuit who lies on the ground.

Jeffreys is best remembered for his part in suppressing the Monmouth Rebellion against James II's rule in 1685, and for conducting the so-called 'Bloody Assize' in the West Country, at which harsh sentences were handed out to the Duke of Monmouth's followers. Nearly 200 people were hanged, and more than 800 transported to the colonies as indentured labourers. He was nicknamed "the hanging judge".

Following the Glorious Revolution, when the Catholic James II left for France and when the armies of William were approaching London, Jeffreys attempted to flee the country and follow the King abroad. He was captured in a public house in Wapping, now named The Town of Ramsgate. Reputedly he was disguised as a sailor, and was recognized by a surviving judicial victims. Jeffreys was in terror of the public when dragged to the Lord Mayor and then to prison "for his own safety". He begged his captors for protection from the mob. He died while in custody in the Tower of London on April 18, 1689.

Two extra (judicial) figures have been etched in the plate peeping above the crowd, captioned 'A Master' and 'A Master Extra'. Also legs added to the Jesuit's body attacked by the devil. One of several similar versions of this print.

Painted & Engraved by James Ward, Painter & Engraver in Mezzotinto to His Royal Highness, The Prince of Wales. [London, Published June 1st. 1799 by James Ward & Co. No. 6 Newman Street.] Mezzotint. 605 x 475mm. Laid on board with overmount obscuring publication line and edges, rubbing and repairs. £450

A Study of 'Lion and Tiger' was exhibited in the Academy in 1798, and it was after this that James Ward became anxious for public approval for his painting.

A prolific artist, James Ward. R.A (1769-1859) was one of the finest animal, portrait, and landscape painters of Regency England. Brittle, pious, and argumentative, Ward worked well into the mid-19th century, creating dynamic compositions that epitomized Romanticism. He was devoted to the art of Rubens and Van Dyck, and emulated them more than any of his contemporaries.

After the painter James Sillett (1764 - 1840) born at Norwich in 1764, and, after working there for a time as an heraldic painter, came to London, where he was employed as a copyist by the Polygraphic Society. From 1787 to 1790 he studied in the schools of the Royal Academy. He became a good miniaturist, and also painted game, fruit, and flowers with considerable skill; he was an exhibitor of works of this class at the Royal Academy from 1796 to 1837. About 1804 Sillett went to reside at Lynn, where he taught drawing and made the illustrations for Richards's 'History of Lynn,' published in 1812. In 1810 he removed to Norwich, where he passed the remainder of his life in the constant practice of his art. He was president of the Norwich Society of Artists in 1815, but was one of the seceders from the original body.

HMS Resolute was a barque-rigged ship specially outfitted for Arctic exploration. In 1852, Resolute was part of a four-ship expedition under Edward Belcher, investigating the fate of the John Franklin expedition, which had searched for the Northwest Passage to Asia.
The Resolute and one of her sister ships became lodged in the Arctic ice of Viscount Melville Sound and was abandoned there in 1853. Recovered by an American whaler, the United States Congress bought her for $40,000 and then had her refitted and sailed to England, where she was presented to Queen Victoria as a token of peace.

The HMS Resolute then served in the Royal Navy for over 20 years, and she was retired in 1879 and broken up. The British government ordered a desk to be made from the timbers of the ship, which was then presented to U.S. President Rutherford B. Hayes in 1880 as a gesture of thanks for her rescue and return. Since then, the desk - known as the Resolute desk - has been used by every president except Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford. Most presidents have used it as their official desk in the Oval Office, but some have had it in their private study in the Executive Residence.

Charles Edward Stuart (1720-88), known also as Bonnie Prince Charlie or the Young Pretender. He was the grandson of James II, who was deposed in 1688. In 1745 he landed in Scotland and led a rising of the Highland clans, in an attempt to regain the British throne. Marching south, he caused panic in London by reaching Derby before retreating. His defeat at Culloden by the Duke of Cumberland in 1746 saw the end of the Jacobite cause.

Admiral Thomas Matthews 1731-1746 '1744. Toulon was an infamous engagement and consequently no battle honour was awarded. A combined Franco-Spanish fleet that had been blockaded in Toulon for two years finally put to sea, led by Admiral de la Bruyere de Court. The blockading British fleet under Admiral Thomas Matthews was roughly the same size as the Franco-Spanish fleet but fearing that the enemy fleet movement was designed to force him out of position and allow a troop convoy to reach Italy, Matthews ordered his fleet to attack before forming up into line. Admiral Richard Lestock, Matthew's second in command, appears to have deliberately misunderstood his orders, and the resulting battle was indecisive, with the British taking more damage than they inflicted. Matthews was dismissed from the Navy for failing to obey permanent fighting instructions for battle. '

Chevalier Joseph Boulogne de Saint-Georges (1745 - 1799) was a violin player and fencing master. Born Guadeloupe, he was the son of a slave and a wealthy French plantation owner, who took him back to France. He died in Paris.

Brown's portrait of St. George was one of Harry Angelo's prized possessions, given pride of place on the wall of his Salle d'Armes in the Opera House, in London's fashionable Haymarket district. It can be seen in Rowlandson's 1787 etching. When the building was destroyed by fire in 1787, the painting was the only object Angelo managed to save.

'Queen Victoria in Ceremonial Robes' with signature facsimile - commemorates the first public appearance of Victoria as Queen on the occasion of her speech at the House of Lords where she prorogated the Parliament of the United Kingdom in July 1837.
Chalon's work was intended as a gift from Victoria to her mother. In the portrait she is wearing the George IV State Diadem, and the State Robes, a dress and a long royal mantle. Her body is half-turned to the right side, on top of a flight of stairs. While her head is turned to the left, her left hand holds the plinth of a column on which there is a sculpted lion. At that time, this portrait was also known as the 'Coronation portrait' because this engraving by Samuel Cousins was distributed at the time of her coronation in 1838.

Chalon was born in Geneva, Switzerland, the son of a watchmaker. Between 1789 and 1794 Chalon's father left Geneva with his family as a result of troubles arising from the French Revolution, and eventually settled in London.

An extremely rare portrait: Chaloner Smith had seen one example, late in his researches, including it in his 'Additions and Corrections'. Russell states that the 'picture' is in the National Portrait Gallery, although it is not listed on their website. The British Library has the mezzotint in the India Office collection, 'presented by Mr. G.W. Hastings': a G. W. Hastings wrote 'A Vindication of Warren Hastings', 1909, and was probably a member of the family. Possibly the print, which shows an old and worn man, was privately published.

St. Kitts in the West Indies. In peacetime he became the private secretary, comptroller of the household, and personal friend of the Princ of Wales. The DNB states
'There is no doubt that he was the associate of the prince in his vices and his supporter in his baser intrigues'. Late in the 1780s he became MP for Huntingdon, supporting the prince's regency.
Returning to the sea in 1793 he played a distinguished part in the battle of the 'Glorious First of June', 1794, for which he received the gold medal. In 1799 he was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral, and in August he was appointed treasurer of Greenwich Hospital, where he died on 17 Nov. 1803.

General Charles Gordon (1833 - 1885) In 1882 there arose in the Soudan, a province of Upper Egypt, one Mohammed Ahmed, who called himself the Mahdi or Messiah, and invited all true believers to join in a holy war against the Christians. Thousands of wild tribesmen flocked to his banner, and in the following year he annihilated an army of eleven thousand English and Egyptians that had attempted to subdue the revolt. Rather than send more soldiers to die in the deserts of the Upper Nile, England decided to abandon the province. But first the thousands of Europeans who had taken refuge in Khartoum and other towns of the Soudan must be rescued from their perilous position. In this crisis the Government turned to the one man who could effect the withdrawal if it was still possible, and in January, 1884, appointed General Gordon to superintend the evacuation of the Soudan.

John Bright was born in Rochdale in 1811, the son of a Quaker cotton spinner. He was educated at a succession of Quaker schools in the north of England, where he developed a lifelong love of the Bible and of the 17th-century English Puritan poets, especially Milton. Quaker beliefs shaped his politics, which consisted mainly of demands for an end to social, political, or religious inequalities between individuals and between peoples. The Brights were benevolent employers, but their faith in self-help and independence placed Bright at the head of the manufacturers who opposed factory legislation, trade unions, and social reform.

He became MP for Durham in 1843 and for Manchester in 1847. He spoke against the Corn Laws in parliament during Peel's second ministry until the laws were repealed in 1846. Bright was a member of the Peace Society and denounced the Crimean War (1854-56) as un-Christian, contrary to the principles of international free trade, and harmful to British interests. In 1868 Bright accepted the post of President of the Board of Trade in Gladstone's first ministry but retired through ill-health in 1870. He returned to political life in 1881 as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He retired in 1882 because he opposed Gladstone's Home Rule policy for Ireland. Bright announced that he was not prepared to see power given to Irish nationalists who had made a mockery of parliamentary government. Bright was influential in the Unionist group in parliament and was regarded as one of the most eloquent speakers of his time.

His election as MP for Halifax and Beverley in 1868 was declared void due to corruption: an enquiry 'conclusively established that out of the constituency of something over 1,100, about 800 were open to bribery and other corrupt influences. Of these, about 250 on each side, it was stated, claimed 'the usual money payment' as a right from a candidate of their own colour, and only looked upon it as a bribe when accepted from one of the other side. The remaining 300 were returned as without political principles, and were locally known as 'rolling stock.'"

Mezzotint. 350 x 500mm. Very fine. £550

Philip Affleck (1726-99), British admiral. A full-length portrait to left seated at a table. He wears a captain's uniform and a white wig and buckled shoes. His left hand is on his knee and his right rests on a chart on the table. Also on the table is a pair of dividers, a globe, a paper knife and a book. In the right background on the wall is a painting of a ship off the Cape of Good Hope.

Affleck spent his early sea training in the service of the Honourable East India Company before transferring to the Royal Navy. He became a lieutenant rather late in 1755. Boscawen made him a commander during the taking of Louisbourg in 1758 and, after following the admiral to the Mediterranean, he was made a captain after the Battle of Lagos in the following year. In the War of American Independence, he commanded the 'Triumph', 74 guns, and fought at Rodney's two actions with de Guichen in 1780. After getting his flag in 1787, he went as commander-in-chief to the West Indies, 1790-93. On his return he became a Lord of the Admiralty until he retired in 1796.

Richard Kempenfelt (1718-1782). Saw service in the West Indies during the War of Jenkins' Ear (1739-48), including the capture of Portobello. In 1757 he joined the East Indies fleet, taking part in the capture of Pondicherry, 1761, and Manila. In 1781 he won the Battle of Ushant, with a vastly inferior force, defeating the French fleet under De Guichen and capturing twenty ships.

Kempenfelt drowned in 1782 when the Royal George keeled over while at anchor off Spithead, drawing attention to the poor state of many British ships. The toll was over 900 lives.

Tilly Kettle (1735-86) was a portrait painter and the first English painter to work in India, 1768-1776.

1922. Will Simmons. [etched in plate lower left.]

Etching, 104 x 82mm. £130

Edward Emerson Simmons (1852 - 1931), American impressionist painter remembered for his mural work, as depicted by his son Will Simmons.

Edward graduated from Harvard College in 1874, and was a pupil of Lefebvre and Boulanger in Paris, where he took a gold medal. In 1894, Simmons was awarded the first commission of the Municipal Art Society, a series of murals - 'Justice,' 'The Fates' and 'The Rights of Man' for the interior of the Criminal Courthouse at 100 Centre Street in Manhattan. This court is the criminal branch of New York Supreme Court where many New Yorkers serve on Jury Duty. Later Simmons decorated the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York, the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., and the Capitol at Saint Paul, Minnesota.

In the year 1914 he travelled with Childe Hassam to view the Arizona desert paintings of the rising California artist, Xavier Martinez at his Piedmont studio.

Simmons was a member of the Ten American Painters, who, as a group, seceded from the Society of American Artists. He was also considered a contributor to the style known as the American Renaissance, a movement after the American Civil War that stressed the relationship of architecture, painting, sculpture and interior design.

Edmund Halley (1656-1742), British Astronomer, the first to calculate a comet's orbit. He went to the University of Oxford, where he studied the theories of Sir Isaac Newton. Because he was so intrigued with these theories, it inspired him to write the Principle which he published with his own money in 1687. In 1721 he was made Astronomer Royal and began an 18 year study of the moon's complete revolution through its ascending and descending nodes. During his life he also wrote another important treatise called Astronomiae Cometicae Synopsis (Synopsis on Cometary Astronomy). It was started in 1682 and published in 1705. In this he mathematically demonstrated that comets move in a elliptic orbits around the sun and how over time they would pass the same point. He had such an accurate prediction that when the comet (now Halley's Comet) returned in 1758, it validated his theory.

10834 [Association meeting at York.]

London, Published as the Act directs, April 6th. 1780 by Robt. Laurie, N° 17., Rosmonds Row, Clerkenwell.

Mezzotint, 230 x 325mm. 9 x 12¾". Very rare. Trimmed to plate. Three vertical and one horizontal fold. £520

A representation, partly allegorical, of the meeting of the Yorkshire Association at York on 30th December 1779. The meeting marked the beginning of an extraordinary, widespread upsurge of discontent among the members of the 'upper class' in the county, provoked by the North ministry's inept handling of the American crisis. The Association produced the well-supported petition of 1780 for economical reform, and was then channelled and organized into an instrument of agitation for reform of the parliamentary system. The Yorkshire Association of the early 1780's marked the first effective extension of modern political radicalism in Great Britain from the metropolitan region into the provinces.

In the foreground is the British Lion being unchained by a sailor and a soldier. The design is surrounded by a garland, the lower part of oak leaves, the upper part of olive. In the centre below the design is a trophy of the royal arms, flags, drums, cannon, an anchor and other munitions of war. In the centre above the design are the arms of the city of York supported by two cornucopias. Below this is a picture of Britannia and America embracing. On the left are the arms of Edwin Lascelles (Lascelles was a supporter of the Court, and through the efforts of Wyvill and Mason, the chief organizers of the Yorkshire Association, a large sum was raised in September 1780 to oppose his re-election.) On the right the arms of Sir George Savile, the other member for Yorkshire, who presented the Yorkshire petition to the House of Commons.

10871 The Modern Phenomenon of a Murphy, or the Gullcatcher of 1838.

London Pubd. by J.L. Marks 91 Long Lane Smithfield. [c.1838.]

Etching in brown ink, 270 x 215mm. 10½ x 8½". £260
A potato-headed figure holding a barometer in one hand and a flaming torch in the other, and 'blowing a cloud' out of his pipe. He is surrounded by captioned astronomical and meteorological phenomena, small figures representing different types of weather circle his feet.

A satire on Patrick Murphy (1782 - 1847), weather prophet. His name was very prominent in 1838 as the author of 'The Weather Almanack (on Scientific Principles, showing the State of the Weather for every Day of the Year 1838). By P. Murphy, Esq., M.N.S'. Under the date of 20 January he said 'Fair, prob. lowest deg. of winter temp.' By a happy chance this proved to be a remarkably cold day, the thermometer at sunrise standing at four degrees below zero. This circumstance raised his celebrity to a great height as a weather prophet, and the shop of his publishers, Messrs. Whittaker & Co., was besieged with customers, while the winter of 1837-8 became known as Murphy's winter. The 1838 almanac ran to forty-five editions, and the prophet made 3,000l., which he almost immediately lost in an unsuccessful speculation in corn. There was nothing very remarkable about the prediction, as the coldest day generally falls about 20 January. In the predictions throughout the year the forecasts were partly right on 168 days and decidedly wrong on 197 days. A popular song of the day, a parody on 'Lesbia has a beaming eye,' commenced 'Murphy has a weather eye.' The almanack was afterwards occasionally published, but its sale very much fell off after the 'nine days' wonder' was past, and ultimately it had a very limited circulation. Murphy, however, persevered in his pursuit, and was about to bring out an almanac for 1848, when he died at his lodgings, 108 Dorset Street, St. Bride's, London, in 1847, aged 65.

Published by J. Lewis Marks (publisher/printer; printmaker; British; Male; 1814 - 1832 or later; fl.), caricaturist, recorded by Dorothy George as working between 1814 and 1832, though his career probably went on much longer as her catalogue stops in 1832. He initially worked for other publishers (especially Tegg), but later more usually published his works himself.

Taylor, George (c.1710–1758), pugilist and showman. Called George the Barber, Beat all the Chief boxers of his time except Broughton. It was not until the early part of the eighteenth century that boxing became popular as a sport in the British Isles with the acknowledgement of James Figg as first British heavyweight king in 1719. When James Figg announced the opening of his Amphitheatre, his name became the first on the long roll of British prize ring champions, and because he was the first to advertise openly the teaching of boxing and exhibitions of skill, he has become known as the Father of Boxing. He was more expert as a cudgeller than as a pugilist. A master with the sword and an expert fencer, he attracted the patronage of the English sports enthusiasts. It was Figg who popularized sparring exhibitions, Figg died in 1740 and George Taylor, his star pupil, succeeded to the championship.

Francis Sartorius 1734-1804, John's son and pupil, was born in 1734. His first important work was a portrait of a racehorse owned by the Duke of Grafton. Other portraits followed including Bay Malton, for the Marquis of Rockingham. Sartorius was a prolific and a favourite of the racing fraternity. To various London galleries he contributed thirty-eight works, including twelve to the Royal Academy. He lived in Soho³lastly, at 17 Gerrard Street⁴and he died on 5

March 1804, in his seventieth year.

Houston, Richard 1721?-1775, mezzotint engraver, born in Dublin about 1721, became a pupil of John Brooks, who was also the master of McArdell and Spooner. Like his fellow-pupils, he possessed much natural talent, and led a dissipated life. He came to London about 1747, where he fell into debt being imprisoned in Fleet Prison. Robert Sayer paid his debts and it wasn't until after 1760 that Houston was free of his commitment to Sayer.

Bay Malton: Prior to the start of his second season on the turf Bay Malton was purchased by Charles Watson-Wentworth, 2nd Marquis of Rockingham. A stout and honest runner he was started only once or twice each season and had a lengthy and lucrative career. He earned his owner and his backers huge sums of money although his finest victory was likely that at York in 1766 where he set a new course record. He lost only two races, both of them in his final two seasons. He retired to Lord Rockingham's stud at Wentworth Woodhouse, near Rotherham, Yorkshire, where he stood privately. He left no stock that bred on although he sired a few runners, including Mr. Preston's Flaunter. Bay Malton died at Wentworth in 1786.

Gimcrack: Making his first start at Epsom in 1764 he won all seven of his races that year. Among his victories at Newmarket was the Whip, allegedly given by Charles 2nd and later said to include hair from the mane and tail of Eclipse. Throughout his active turf career he ran in nearly forty races, the majority of them in heats and over long distances. He was beaten only ten times in eight years. In 1766 when owned by Count Lauraguais he performed the remarkable feat of running twenty-two and a half miles in one hour in France. He is still remembered today for his racing excellence and commemorated by the Gimcrack Stakes held at York, Scone Palace, Scone, Perthshire, Scotland. It was constructed in 1808 for the Earls of Mansfield by William Atkinson. Built of red sandstone with a castellated roof, it is a classic example of the late Georgian Gothic style. In the Middle Ages the land was the site of a major Augustinian abbey, Scone Abbey (nothing now remains above ground level), the crowning-place of the Kings of the Scots (on the Stone of Destiny) down to Alexander III. Boats on the lake in foreground and cattle.

From a series of Scottish views by French painter and lithographer François Joseph Dupressoir (1800 - 1859), published in London and Paris.
